Workshop Aim

The workshop will be dedicated to discuss important communication issues related to prognosis and discussing end of life.

Five main questions will be asked to all participants:

1. When should the end-of-life discussions happen?
2. Who else, besides the patient, should be present?
3. What should be discussed?
4. Who within the multidisciplinary team should be responsible for the discussion?
5. How might it be best done?

In order to allow participant to express their opinions, the audience will be divided in smaller groups and each group will discuss the same questions. Answers will be collected, discussed, taking into account geographical and cultural differences, and conclusions and future actions will be agreed upon (e.g. potential position paper).
